Invented Toy Electric Trains, Founded Lionel Corp. Which Made Them Earn Millions

The man who influenced the celebration of American Christmas almost as much as Santa Claus was Joshua Lionel Cowen, inventor of the toy electric train and founder of the Lionel Corp., which manufactured the miniature trains that have chugged around hundreds of thousands of Christmas trees for the last generation, says the New York Herald Tribune. Mr. Cowen, 85, died at his home on Nightingale Trail in Palm Beach, where he had lived for the past several years. He ended his connection with the Lionel Corp. about eight years ago.

Mr. Cowen was born to a well-to-do New York City family, and showed, as a boy, the same tendency to tinker and the same impatience with formal schooling that have marked other American inventors. His father put him in Peter Cooper Institute, where he assembled what he later believed to be the world's first electric doorbell. Joshua Cowen then briefly attended City College and Columbia University.

He left school to work for an electric-light company and, at 18, invented a fuse to ignite photographer's magnesium flash powder. The U.S. Navy recognized that the fuse could be used to detonate mines. The Navy gave the boy a contract for 24,000 fuses and put him in business as a teen-age manufacturer.

With capital from this venture, Mr. Cowen went into business manufacturing others of his electrical inventions. His next product, a failure for him, made millions for the man he gave it away to.

The product was an electric flower-light — a metal tube containing a battery that lighted a small bulb on one end. The tube was to be placed in potted plants to light the flowers. There was trouble with the switch, though, and in disgust, Mr. Cowen gave the idea to his salesman, Conrad Hubert.

The product was, of course, the world's first flashlight. Mr. Hubert developed it into the Eveready flashlight and left an estate of $6 million at his death as the result of Mr. Cowen's gift.

Mr. Cowen had become busy developing a battery-powered fan after giving away the flower-light. While tinkering with the fan motor, it occurred to him to mount it on a toy wooden flatcar, says the New York Herald Tribune. He soon had the car buzzing around a track made of brass strips, and the toy electric train was born.

This was in 1900. Mr. Cowen sold the first car to a novelty shop on Cortlandt Street, in New York, for $4 and received orders for more. The trains were named Lionel (Mr. Cowen's middle name) and were an immediate success.

By 1907, Mr. Cowen had added a locomotive to the trains and a transformer to the tracks so that the power could come from house current instead of batteries. Some of the earlier transformers became red-hot in use and others gave eye-bugging jolts of electricity to small children. Mr. Cowen's improvement of the transformer was a breakthrough to universal acceptance of the train. He himself felt that Lionel's development in 1926 of a sequence switch that enabled remote control of trains was the turning point that led to model railroading.

Lionel had such a steady rise to success that, after World War II, it appeared to be the most profitable railroad business in the country. By 1954, retail sales of trains were up to $45 million a year. Already, it was an American cliche that fathers bought trains for Junior so they could play with them themselves. Lionel trains chugged around a Maharajah's table, carrying gold-plated dishes, and collected money in Grand Central for the Fresh Air Fund.

Mr. Cowen never lost his fascination with mechanical improvements or his zeal in making toy trains accurate replicas of real trains before his retirement in 1957, says the New York Herald Tribune. Soon afterward, the company passed out of family control.

Surviving Mr. Cowen are his wife, Mrs. Lillian A. Cowen; a

Text Voted By Council Decries Anti-Semitism, Denies Jewish Guilt For Crucifixion

Prelates of the Roman Catholic Church gave final approval to a historic decree offering friendship and respect to other great world religions, decrying anti-Semitism, and denying collective Jewish guilt for the Crucifixion, says the New York Times. By a vote of 1,763 to 250, the world hierarchy, meeting in Ecumenical Council Vatican II, adopted a decree on the church's attitude toward non-Christians that has been a subject of sharp controversy since the Council opened four years ago.

There remained only the pro forma vote on the document in public session and its promulgation by Pope Paul VI as the authoritative teaching of the supreme powers of the church — the Roman Pontiff and the Ecumenical Council.

This means that laity and clergy will be under obligation to "recognize, preserve and promote those spiritual and moral goods as well as those socio-cultural values" found among Moslems, Hindus, Buddhists, and Jews.

With respect to the Jews, it will mean that it is forbidden to teach that the Jewish people, either of Christ's time or of today, have any collective guilt for the action of those of their leaders who delivered Him up for crucifixion by the Romans. Narrow literal interpretations of Scriptural accounts of the Passion have been identified in sociological surveys as a source of anti-Semitic attitudes.

The positive aspects of the document have sometimes been obscured by the bitter controversy, on both political and theological grounds, that has been raised over details of wording.

The passages dealing with the Jews in the approved version are, in the opinion of most observers, less warm and generous and more theologically qualified, says the New York Times, than was the text given preliminary approval by the Council last year.

Nonetheless, the essential message — fraternity in belief in God and the interpretation of the Passion on the cross of Jesus' expiation of the sins of all mankind, rather than of a specifically Jewish wrong — remains.

Council experts took pains to point out that the 250 votes cast against the document today did not mean that those who cast them were anti-Semitic.

Among the opponents, they said, were many, notably churchmen from mission territories, who believe that a conciliatory position on non-Christian religions will be "either inadequate or inopportune" in efforts to promote conversion.

There were also those advocates of a more strongly worded declaration who voted against the decree in protest against modifications of the previous text that, in their opinion, weakened its impact.

Some of these were almost certainly among the 245 prelates who, on a preliminary vote, disapproved the elimination of words that specifically enjoined against calling the Jewish people "guilty of deicide."

The general theme has been expressed in other language but the term "deicide" was excised because of the joint pressures of conservative theologians and of prelates from Arab states who feared that the strong wording might provoke anti-Christian reprisals by Moslem governments.

Zachariah Shuster, European director of the American-Jewish Committee, hailed adoption of the declaration as a "significant event that cannot fail to have an impact in various parts of the world."

"It is unfortunate," he added, "that the declaration contains some passages, particularly those referring to ancient times, which might cause misunderstanding and confusions," says the New York Times. He referred to amendments, written under Arab and conservative pressure that, before denying collective Jewish guilt, recalled the Jews' rejection of the Gospels.

The Rev. John Long, an American Jesuit member of the Vatican Secretariat for the Promotion of Christian Unity, pointed out at the American bishops' press panel that the decree was the first church council document directed to others in a fraternal spirit. Previous councils, he said, proclaimed crusades against the other great religions.

The Rev. Thomas Stransky, an American Paulist and, in the secretariat, a tireless, outspoken advocate of a liberal resolution of the issues, said the document was "only a beginning" of the church's facing up to the problems of a dialogue with non-Christians.

The Council completed action on the declaration amid minor distractions caused by an anti-Semitic pamphlet mailed to the prelates in the name of some 30 supposedly Christian organizations and by what appeared to be a crank letter warning of the imminent explosion of a bomb in St. Peter's Basilica, where the Council meets.

The head of the American Jewish Committee asserted that the Vatican Councils' adoption of the declaration on the Jews was "an act of justice long overdue."

Morris B. Abram, in a statement expressed regret, however, over some of the declaration's assertions on the ground that they might "give rise to misunderstandings."

In Rome a spokesman for Protestant churches welcomed the Vatican Council's adoption of the statement on non-Christian religions because anti-Semitism is a "denial of the Christian faith itself," says the New York Times. Dr. W. A. Visser d'Hooft, general secretary of the World Council of

Vilna Sites Remind Tourists Of Partisans Led By Jewish Editor

Historic sites visited on a Sunday outing in the vicinity of Vilna, Lithuanian capital, provided a stark reminder of the distant past as well as of the recent past of the disputed region, writes Theodore Shabad, in the New York Times. The village of Pirciupis, 30 miles south of Vilna, is to the Lithuanians what Lidice is to the Czechs and Oradour-sur-Glane is to the French.

In June, 1944, in reprisal for a partisan raid, the Germans burned the village and killed its 119 inhabitants by shooting or by driving them into buildings that had been set on fire.

The site is now marked by an 18-foot-high granite statue of a grief-stricken woman, symbolizing the Lithuanian people, for which the sculptor, Gediminas Jokubonis, was awarded the Lenin prize in 1963. On granite blocks nearby are engraved the names and ages of the victims of the massacre, including 49 children under the age of 15.

Busloads of visitors come regularly to see the monument and to inspect a little museum that occupies part of the white-brick schoolhouse of the rebuilt village. Pirciupis is situated in clearings of Rundininkai Forest, part of a thick virgin forest that once covered large areas of Eastern Europe.

A few miles from the village, at the end of winding tracks leading deep into the forest, was the headquarters of the Partisans of southern Lithuania. They were led by Genrikas Zimanas, Jewish editor of Tiesa, the newspaper of the Lithuanian Communist party.

For the benefit of tourists, Vilna University students and one of their professors, a former guerrilla in Rundininkai Forest, reconstructed half a dozen logwalled dugouts in which the partisan command lived and plotted ambushes and sabotage raids against the Germans, says the New York Times, from 1942 until the Red Army recovered the area in July, 1944.

An old Polish forester, in a chance encounter at the former guerrilla base, recalled how the Germans regularly patrolled the nearby highway asking peasants for information on the whereabouts of the Partisan units.

"There was no use denying that the Partisans had come to the villages in search of food," the forester said. "In winter telltale tracks in the snow told the Germans more than we could have." The guerrilla base was bombed several times but the German forces never succeeded in penetrating into the forest on ground.

Seventeen miles west of Vilna is Trakai, capital of Lithuania in the 14th and 15th centuries before the seat of power was moved to Vilna. In the last few years, over reported opposition of former Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev, who wanted the funds used for other purposes, the Lithuanians have reconstructed a medieval castle that figured prominently in the wars against the Teutonic Knights in the 14th Century.

The castle is situated on an island in a forest-bordered lake in one of the most picturesque places of Lithuania and is a popular week-end picnic site. Families were scattered over the green lawns and accordion music was in the air, says the New York Times. Children climbed over the ancient ramparts and young couples sauntered along the paths.

18 Boys And Girls Spend Month Helping "Jewish Indians" Build And Paint

Eighteen high school boys and girls from Scarsdale, N.Y., and other places in The United States spent a month helping an isolated community of 120 fellow Jews in Mexico.

The one hundred and twenty Mexican Jews live in Venta Prieta, a hamlet of four hundred people 60 miles north of Mexico City on Highway 85, which runs to the Texas border. The Star of David on the box-like building in which they worship is Venta Prieta's only real distinguishing mark, says the New York Times. The "Jewish Indians," as they are called, are thought to be the only peasants in Mexico who leave their fields idle on Saturday.

Next to the freshly painted yellow synagogue, a new community center was dedicated. It was built in a month "with the hands and hearts," as one young builder put it, of the American voluntary work contingent known as the Mitzvah Corps or Corps of Good Deeds.

The nine girls and nine boys, 15 to 18 years old, belong to the National Federation of Temple Youth, a junior affiliate of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, a Reform group. The contingent was led by a French-born rabbi, Leo Abrami, who was ordained two years ago in the United States and whose congregation up to now was in Guatemala.

The youngsters' project marked the first time anyone from the outside had taken a friendly interest in the tiny community. The members of the community, are ignored by the middle-class Jews of Mexico City, as they are descended from the Spanish Jews who went there in the 16th century to escape persecution.

Another theory is that late in the last century the inhabitants of Venta Prieta came under the influence of British missionaries of a sect called the Church of God, which attempts a synthesis of Judaism and Christianity, and that some of the villagers gradually shifted to full Judaism.

None of the 120 members speaks Hebrew. Services are conducted by a lay member in Spanish, with some labored reading from the Torah in halting Hebrew. All are fervent Zionists who hope to emigrate to Israel some day.

The community greeted the American youngsters suspiciously at first, so little accustomed was it to outside friendship. But the suspicion disappeared as the volunteers mixed and poured cement for the community center, painted the synagogue, laid walks, and planted trees in the dry soil.

Among the workers were Douglas Chilson, Jeanne Brody, and Margarite Gutner of Scarsdale; Edna May Neuwirth, of River Edge, N.J.; Ruth Tenzer of Long Branch, N.J., and Penn Millson, of Middlebury, Conn. Others came from Georgia, Texas, Pennsylvania, Oklahoma, and Arkansas.

Rabbi Abrami was taken into custody by two Mexican detectives for questioning. He was suspected of preaching on a tourist visa. The United States Embassy intervened and he was released, says the New York Times. The dedication ceremony went off on schedule, and many of the participants cried as if they were at a Jewish wedding.

CONFERENCE DELIBERATIONS ON "INTERMARRIAGE AND THE FUTURE OF THE JEWISH COMMUNITY"

Encouraged by the overwhelming response of the community and the wide interest engendered throughout the New England Jewish community as a result of the deliberations of the conference on "Intermarriage And The Future Of The Jewish Community" held at Kehillath Israel, in Brookline, Mass., the leadership of the four sponsoring organizations are setting up the mechanics for the implementation of the resolutions adopted at the conference.

The Massachusetts Board of Rabbis; Associated Synagogues of Massachusetts; Vaad Harabonim of Massachusetts; Bnai Brith and Bnai Brith Hillel Foundations, are determined to treat this problem on the highest community level. The president of the Associated Synagogues, Harry Kraft, indicated it is the first such attempt in the history of New England Jewry to deal with this situation.

"The conference," said Mr. Kraft, "had it as its purpose, to review the situation of intermarriage in the light of its historic prospective, to analyze its effect on the Jewish community, and to explore the methodology and the framework of reference for future action in dealing with this problem. The sponsoring organizations, who are responsible for the conference on intermarriage feel that it is most urgent for the organized Jewish community to begin a concerted effort and come to grips with the situation on all levels of community endeavor."

Dr. Simon G. Kramer, president of the Hebrew Theological College, of Chicago, Illinois, indicated in his "Historical Evaluation Of Intermarriage" that the problem of inter-faith marriage from a non-sectarian viewpoint, whether or not ethnic or religious, "people bring to marriage a sense of values or the way they feel about values and live by the standards of these same values."

"Intermarriage," said Dr. Kramer, "did take place throughout the ages but was never the cause of an alarming over-all community problem. The Jews, locked in a straight jacket of a hostile world, and being forced to create their own norm of behavior as a media for identification and acceptance by the Jewish community, were relatively secure against the danger of intermarriage."

Dr. Immanuel Jakobovits, in his discussion on "Intermarriage: The Responsibility of the Community," pointed to the Kehillah, the Jewish Community Council, "as the Government in exile." "A Jewish person," said Dr. Jakobovits, "felt himself to be a religious citizen of that spiritual community called the Kehillah and his behavior vis-a-vis the Jewish community, had to reflect a sense of allegiance. Today the Jew does not feel himself to be part of the organic Jewish community."

He pointed out that during the Napoleonic era, the Jew was disfranchised spiritually as a people and claimed that the reform movement in Germany in 1844 opened the floodgates for intermarriage, by officially accepting such a principle that one may belong to a religion but not be part of a distinct people.

Dr. Jakobovits also said that in addition to the central community structure which gave official spiritual status to each Jewish member of the community, there was also the sanctum sanctorum of the Jewish home, where a child while still in his cradle, was conditioned for a sense of values and religious behavior that served as a shield and invisible armor against the pressure from the outside.

"Today," observed Dr. Jakobovits, "a Jew does not have the sense of belonging to the total Jewish community. He may belong to an Orthodox movement, to a Conservative movement, to a Reform movement, or to a benevolent association or fraternal organization but not to the total Jewish community. He has lost his anchorage in the center of the Jewish community and the deep roots developed by his forefathers throughout the ages have been utterly cut off.

"He is suspended in mid-air of ignorance, apathy, and indifference; he is waging a struggle for survival in a society where the individual is engulfed by the 'mid stream' of a way of life that supposedly removed the barriers among peoples and he accepts this intermarriage to be a natural sequence of a Utopia that has already fulfilled ifs messianic dreams. The Jewish home is a thing of the past.

"You speak of the problem of intermarriage on the college campus," exclaimed Dr. Jakobovits, "and you fail to understand that this was a natural result of a situation where the individual Jew does not have the sense of belonging to the total Jewish community and the benefit of upbringing in a religious home."

Dr. Herman Pollack, director of Bnai Brith Hillel Foundation, at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, speaking on "Intermarriage-The Campus Evaluation," said: "Today, 350,000 Jewish students are attending colleges in the United States, and they are a reservoir for leadership in the Jewish community of tomorrow. The student does not live in an ivory tower divorced from the realities and problems of daily life. The trends in the larger society do not escape the college campus. The college student speaks of being uprooted and alienated. He may even admit that he is self-centered or egocentric. He is challenged intellectually and finds the securities that once gave him support to be superficial and inadequate. There is anguish in discovering oneself.

"The stereotypes about college students and the campus should not block us from recognizing the large number of students who feel a responsibility for the future development of Jewish life, who are aware of the spiritual, ethical, and social problems of our age, who feel that they are part of the process of history which they can help to direct.

"Intermarriage has qualitative as well as quantitative implications. Not numbers determined the survival of our people, but a sense of purpose and the will to live. Jewish life must therefore become more meaningful, creative, and challenging in both its outlook and deed. More must be done to inspire, stimulate, and arouse the loyalties of Jewish college youth. They must be made to realize that the future of our historic tradition depends in large measure on the decisions they make and actions in which they engage.

"Youth has a significant contribution to make, but they need greater encouragement, cooperation, and understanding from the adult world. Youth can again be the dreamers, visionaries, and builders of a new life, a new culture, and a new civilization. This hope grows out of the Pesach season of freedom that college students have just observed with conviction and enthusiasm."

Dr. B. Zvi Sobel, Assistant Professor of Sociology, at Brandeis University, challenged the position taken by Dr. Jakobovits and said: "I am a product of this strictly religious Jewish home. I was raised in an ultra-Orthodox Seminary known as Yeshiva Torah Vodaath in Brooklyn, New York. Surely, I agree to the need for religious values. Surely, we must have the benefit of a Jewish education. All this, however, is not enough. We must recognize that we are living in a free society. We must provide the answers to the problems of the day. We must recognize that today's youth is not ready to be led blindly and to accept obedience without fully recognizing the challenge of modern times.

"A Jewish boy must want to understand why you tell him that all men are born equal, all of them created by the same God, all of them entitled to the same rights and the same privileges and the same opportunities, and yet some of them may not be considered for dating and marriage. You tell these young men who have been raised without a Jewish education and without the benefit of a Jewish home: 'Go back to the ghetto.' Entrench yourself in the way of your forefathers, seek the security of the Walls of Jericho, forget the sounding trumpet of the civilization that causes these walls to crumble, tell this to the young Jewish college student, and find how far you can get!"

Dr. Albert I. Gordon, Rabbi of Temple Emanuel, and author of "Intermarriage; Interfaith, Interracial, Inter-ethnic" said in part:

"Interfaith marriages will increase in number within the next decade. The number of Jews involved in these marriages will increase also. Numerous factors are at work in our society which make this almost inevitable. Among the factors that tend to produce this result are: the weakening of religious and family ties; the increased opportunities for contact between persons of all religions and races; the common aspiration for a peaceful world in which all men shall be brothers. The Jewish community and Judaism, the faith of the Jew, have much at stake if interfaith marriages increase greatly.

"Although I do not believe that there is any likelihood of the Jew vanishing, there is every likelihood that the unique Hebraic moral and spiritual values will play a lesser role than they presently do. As a consequence, society and all humans in our midst will suffer.

"Not only are better and more intensive religious schools necessary for the Jew but Jewish parents must be reminded that their responsibilities as instructors of their children, both by what they say and what they do, must be greater today than ever before. It is time that we stopped turning over to educators the responsibilities and duties that really belong to good parents."

Rabbi Gordon emphasized that he would not encourage conversions and that he and Rabbi Kramer share the same position as to the basic ritualistic requirements such as circumcision and immersion.

Dr. Abraham J. Feldman took exception to the earlier statements made by Dr. Jakobovits relating to the Brunswick Conference of the Reform Jewish movement and indicated that the preponderous majority of the Rabbinate of the Reform movement throughout the country would refuse to officiate at a mixed marriage. Rabbi Feldman, however, sees nothing wrong in encouraging conversion and emphasizes that they welcome those who seek to enter "our Jewish stream of history and life."

He said: "It is the mixed marriage that constitutes the problem for us." "By mixed marriage, I understand that two people marry, each other, one is a Jew, and the other is the follower of another religion, and both choose to continue faithful to their respective ancestral faiths even though they are married to each other and are striving to create a unified and harmonious home.

"I know all the attractive and appealing arguments for a Rabbi to sanction mixed marriages and for his officiating at such marriages. I do not accept these arguments because of the responsibility which a Rabbi has to the continuity of Jewish life and its integrity and meaningfulness. The Rabbi, by virtue of his office, is to safeguard the integrity and unity of the Jewish family. The rabbinate should hold firmly to the line of not officiating at mixed marriages.

"Conversion, in such cases, should be encouraged and the means of conversion, the process of conversion, should be made inviting and attractive. The Jewish community should be taught to practice the Jewish belief that the genuine convert to Judaism is to be welcomed and honored greatly for the choice he has made; and be permitted to participate in all communal activities and be made to feel at home. Preparation and conversion should be on the level of education, information, comprehension, and then the essentials of Jewish religious practice. In every case of conversion, the Jewish party should

THE SHAMMAS WHO WAS A SERGEANT: ODYSSEY OF A JEWISH IMMIGRANT FROM POLAND

By Rabbi Nathan Witkin, Director of the Jewish Welfare Board Armed Forces Service Center

Forty-one years ago Max Nissenbaum, an adventurous young native of Poland, accompanied by three Argentines, set out from Buenos Aires on a walking expedition to the United States. The group never completed the journey, but the Polish youth eventually made it on his own. The story of how he did it was recalled recently at Albrook Air Force Base in the Panama Canal Zone, when Max, a Master Sergeant with the 1978th Communications Group, retired from the Air Force with 22 years of service.

During Max's three three-year tours of duty in the Canal Zone, he was an almost daily visitor to the National Jewish Welfare Board (JWB) Armed Forces Service Center in Balboa, and he never missed a Friday evening or Sabbath morning service. He was one of my key contact men for more than 20 years. As soon as a new airman would arrive on base, he would let me know immediately. Max is also an amateur radio operator. For the past three years he was one of the volunteer amateur radio operators at our JWB Club's amateur radio station KZ5JW.

I first met Max here at Rainey Air Force Base in 1943, then known as Borinquin Field. His three tours of duty in the Canal Zone began in 1945, in 1952 and, the last one prior to his retirement on May 31, 1965, in 1962. But his odyssey began almost 20 years before I ever set eyes on him.

Max was born in Jamov, Poland. He was in his teens when his family decided to emigrate to the United States. Max was all set to accompany them when fate changed his plans. He was conscripted into the Polish army. He served as a foot soldier at various camps around Danzig until he had fulfilled his military requirement a year later. By this time the other members of the family had settled in the United States and he decided to join them. Fortified with a sum of money from his mother, and plenty of ambition, he made his way from Poland to Cherbourg, France. There he booked passage aboard a British vessel bound for Argentina, a little off course, perhaps, but still bringing him closer to the United States.

His funds were practically depleted when he eventually reached Buenos Aires, but he soon landed a job as a painter. Speaking only Polish made things difficult for Max. He soon remedied this situation by going to school at night to learn Spanish. Keeping close tabs on newspaper advertisements, Max, one day in 1924, noticed that several newspapers were sponsoring a walking expedition to the United States, and were calling for four young volunteers. Max was one of those selected. When the group reached Ecuador two years later, after trekking through Argentina, Chile, and Peru, their adventuresome spirit was very much deflated. They decided to abandon the expedition and promptly disbanded.

Young Max immediately set out for the nearest American Consular Office, and was told that it might take two to three years to get a visa to the United States. As an alternative, he enlisted in the Ecuadorian cavalry for a year. Although he had no riding experience, he was soon pulling mounted police duty in Guayaquil and enjoying every minute of it. His ambition to reach the United States was still strong, and when he was discharged from the cavalry, he signed up as a deck hand on a windjammer bound for Colombia. This calling was also one at which he was far from adept, but the vessel did reach Colombia, after floundering in calm seas for several weeks.

Bolstered by the experience gained on his lengthy voyage, Max wasted no time in signing on as a crew member aboard a British steamer bound for New York. There he was granted the necessary permission to enter the United States and join his family.

The military called again in 1942 when Max was drafted into the U.S. Army Air Corps. After completing basic training and radio operator-mechanic training at Scott Air Force Base, Ill., he was sent to Kelly Field, Texas, to attend the control tower operator school. Later he was transferred to Sioux Falls, S.D., and it was there in 1943 that he became a citizen of the United States.

Assignments since then, in addition to those in the United States, have taken him to the South Pacific, Hawaii, Korea, and Okinawa. Since Max's retirement, he has appointed himself the official sexton in the JWB Chapel which is located in the JWB Center. Max also continues to man our amateur radio station almost daily. He is known and beloved by a multitude of servicemen, their wives, and children. Looking back on his 22 years in the armed service, Max said: "I liked it!"

CONFERENCE DELIBERATIONS

be given at least a refresher course and should be encouraged to renew a commitment to an affirmative Jewish life.

"It is foolish to blind one's eye to the fact that there is an increasing number of marriages between Jews and non-Jews, and I think we should extend the hand of welcome and develop attitudes of courtesy and kindliness. All this is possible only by a greatly changed attitude on the part of both Rabbis and laymen in the Jewish community."

Dr. Simon Kramer in summing up the position of Orthodoxy, which also reflects the thinking of most in the Conservative movement, indicated that to encourage conversion would mean to tamper with the most sacred in the individual's own spiritual domain. "We can only open the doors to those who genuinely desire to come in, who like Ruth of old would say: 'Thy people shall be my people and Thy God shall be my God.'"

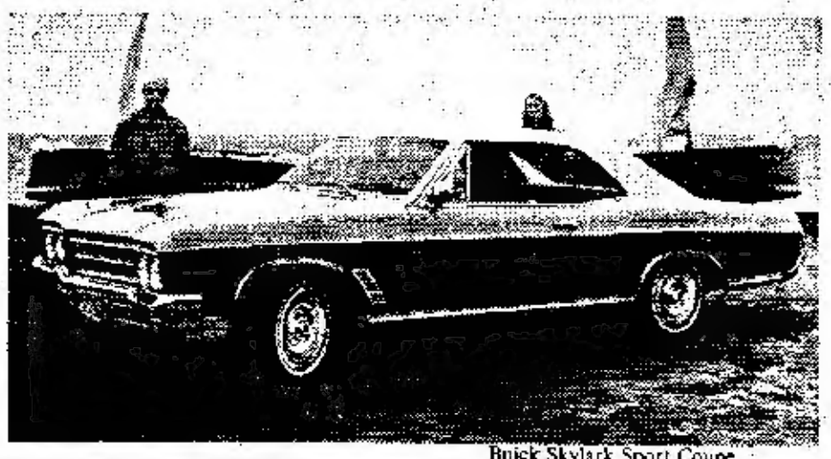
Introducing the tuned car. 1966 Buick.

What makes a car a car is styling, performance, braking and ride and handling. Only when they're all tuned together is the car a Buick.

Buick Riviera



Buick Skylark Sport Coupe

Buick Wildcat 4-Door Hardtop

A GENERAL MOTORS VALUE

We tuned the 1966 Buick. Not just the engine, but the whole car. We tuned all the elements. Like you would the instruments in an orchestra. And just as the tuned orchestra gives the effect of one-ness, the tuned car says blended perfection from bumper to bumper and road-line to roof-line.

Tuned Performance. We tuned Buick performance. Not just by increasing the efficiency of the six Buick engines, but by tuning everything that translates this power into activity. The transmission, the full coil suspension, the balanced drive-shaft, the brakes. All working together. All tuned.

Tuned Ride. We tuned the traditional Buick ride. And came up with something truly unique. Boulevard comfort with enough road-feel to let you know you're in charge. Then we added extra jolt-cushioning rubber to places that get a lot of pounding. The result is a very special kind of ride. A tuned ride.

Tuned Styling. We even tuned the way Buick looks. Possible? Look at any one of the Buicks. Every sweeping line and gentle curve suggests motion. Inside and out, the car has been designed to move. And to say so. Quietly. But emphatically. That's tuned styling.

Drive the 1966 Buick, Riviera, Electra 225, Wildcat, LeSabre, Skylark or Special Deluxe. They're all Buicks. All tuned cars. All tuned to you. Wouldn't you really rather have a Buick?

Be sure to watch "Telescope", "The Fugitive" and "The Red Skelton Hour" now showing on television. Check local listings for time and channel. M21644

YOUNG BRITONS BUILD BRIDGE TO AGED IN MALBEN HOME IN ISRAEL

Six young volunteers from England, aged between 19 and 26, brought the spirit of youth into the Neve Avot home for aged in Pardess Hanna, halfway between Tel Aviv and Haifa, this past summer. They belong to a group of forty, selected from over 2,000 candidates (most of them not Jewish) by the Bridge Association of Great Britain, a movement to promote better understanding between English and Israeli youth.

The Bridge Association was founded in 1960 by Colonel Robert Henriquez, author of "One Hundred Hours To Suez," and Mrs. Chaim Weizmann, wife of the first president of Israel, and other prominent Jewish and non-Jewish personalities in England and Israel.

After four weeks of work at Kfar Hanassi, an English speaking kibbutz (settlement) in upper Galilee, the forty youngsters split into small groups, each of which went to a different institution or locale. One of these groups, three young men and three young women, volunteered to do nursing and social work at one of Israel's largest homes for the aged, Neve Avot, operated by Malben, the Joint Distribution Committee's program in Israel for the care of aged and handicapped immigrants, supported by United Jewish Appeal funds. There are 1,100 residents in Neve Avot and another 2,000 in Malben's other 12 homes for aged and infirm newcomers.

The volunteers plunged into their work, using German and French words in addition to hand signals to overcome the absence of a common language. Frank Cox, leader of the six Neve Avot volunteers, is a surveyor by profession and a youth leader in his own country. "I find the elderly folk here quite different from our own," he said, "perhaps because ours have reached a ripe old age in a sheltered environment, while so many of these people have lost their families and their homes."

Tall and soft-spoken, Susan Boulton, 23, from Oswestry on the Welsh border, a zoology student at St. Andrews University, smiled as she gave a pill to one of her patients. She said, "It's good I took a nursing course at the Duke of Edinburgh hospital . . . it's coming in handy right now."

Meg McDonald, 20, of Southwick near Dumphries, Scotland, and Jeanette Shelton, 20, the only Jewish youngster in the group, were busily engaged in occupational therapy, while Philip Hudson, 19, a psychology major at Durham University, helped to bathe one of the men, and worked around the dormitory. Their chores done, the young people mingled with the oldsters and took part in their activities, weaving, painting, walking. One even played ball with a spry 80-year-old lady.

"There are over 1,100 old people in this village," explained Ya'acov Susserman, deputy director of Neve Avot. "Most of our residents lead an active, independent life. Nevertheless, one of our major problems is to break the monotony of their daily routine, to create changes in their environment, to distract them from their elderly neighbors. They get fed up seeing the same old faces day in and day out. These youngsters brought with them a refreshing smile and a helping hand, but above all their youthful spirit!"

The six youngsters lived within the village compound. They started work at 7 A.M. and continued right through to 3 P.M. After work, they were at liberty to do whatever they wished. Most of them were befriended by residents of Pardess Hanna, a neighboring village, and spent considerable time in the local youth club or visiting in private homes.

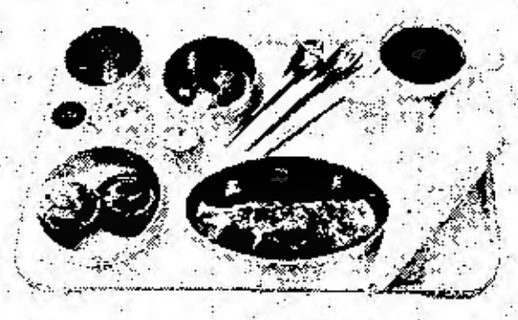
During the month they spent in the home and in the village, they managed to pick up some Hebrew, Yiddish, and Rumanian words. They also became attached to their elderly friends and before returning to England, the youngsters gave them a farewell party complete with English songs, sketches and folk dances.

Meg McDonald summed up the feeling on both sides: "We feel so grateful for having been allowed to contribute something to these old people; they are so grateful for the little we have given them."

Eastern's jet "Commuter Service" to New York:

Leaves at 8:00 a.m.

Eastern has 5 flights a day from Montreal to New York—all by jet. But the one at 8:00 a.m. was planned especially for business men. Because it's a jet, you'll spend less time up in the air, more time in New York doing business. We scheduled this flight at 8:00 so you'll get there for a full working day (you'll also miss the rush hour in both cities). At Dorval, arrangements have been made to avoid line-ups—for example, there's an express check-in counter if you only have a briefcase. En route, you'll enjoy a hot breakfast before arriving at Eastern's modern terminal with shops, dining rooms, a Falcon Lounge and plenty of taxis at the door.



Returns at 6:30 p.m. or 9:15 p.m.

There are 2 flights home—both by jet. The first leaves New York at 6:30, giving you a full day in the city and still getting you home before the kids are in bed. A full dinner is served in both classes (that makes both breakfast and supper on us) and liquor service is provided in both classes. If you get tied up at the office or decide to have dinner in town, a second flight leaves at 9:15, arriving at 10:25 p.m. Liquor service, coffee or tea are available on this flight, too. Add it all up—convenient schedules; jet service both ways; 2 meals; liquor service; modern terminals; friendly, courteous attention—your future business trips are going to be a real pleasure. We call it the "Business Man's Special." You'll call it great.

Canada-Israel Chamber Of Commerce And Industry Honours Canadian Ambassador To Israel

Canada-Israel Chamber of Commerce and Industry honoured Ambassador-designate R. L. Rogers at a luncheon to bid farewell to him on his appointment to the post of Canadian Ambassador to Israel, held at the Chateau Laurier Hotel, in Ottawa, by the Canada-Israel Chamber of Commerce and Industry. In the large gathering were Assistant Deputy Minister T. R. Fletcher (Department of Trade & Commerce); Assistant Deputy Minister M. H. Wershof, Q.C., (Department of External Affairs); Israel Ambassador Gershon Avner, of the Israeli Delegation to the Inter-Parliamentary Conference; and representatives of several government departments and the business community.

E. R. Ernst, who is president of the Chamber, and deputy general manager of the International Division of the Bank of Montreal, wished Mr. Rogers every success in his new assignment. Mr. Ernst invited Ambassador Rogers to become joint honorary president of the Chamber to succeed A. J. Andrew who was recently appointed Ambassador to Sweden. The Chamber, said Mr. Ernst, is the only organization which has branches and members in Canada and in Israel, and he expressed the hope that the friendly relations and economic links between the two countries would be intensified during Mr. Rogers' term of office. He referred to the recent expansion of the activities of the Chamber through opening new branches such as one in Nova Scotia, in the presence of Premier R. L. Stanfield; and to the Traineeship Program under which a number of younger business executives from Israel are undergoing a specialized training program in Canadian member companies.

Ambassador Avner extended his best wishes to Mr. Rogers, who in his reply said how much he was looking forward to seeing the remarkable achievements of Israel and her people. "Relations between our two countries are already close and friendly, so close that we even hold our elections at the same time" remarked Mr. Rogers. As one of the honorary presidents of the Chamber, he said he would be glad to assist the chamber and its members individually to expand their activities in increasing trade relations between Canada and Israel, which is Canada's principal trading partner in the Middle East.

Mr. Rogers was born in Toronto, in 1919. He graduated from the University of Toronto in 1942; served in the Canadian Army in Europe during the second World War; was with the Department of External Affairs since 1946; served in Washington, Ottawa, Tokyo (First Secretary); Ottawa (Far Eastern Problems); London (Counsellor for M. E. Affairs); Paris (Counsellor and Deputy Permanent representative on North Atlantic Council); and again Ottawa as head of Far Eastern Division.

HUMAN CAPITAL WASTED IS GREATEST IN QUEBEC, SAYS U. OF M. PROF.

The greatest waste in human resources in Canada, and perhaps in North America, is in Quebec, said Guy Rocher, vice-dean of the Faculty of Social Sciences of the University of Montreal. The system of teaching in the schools continues to favor an elite, while the lack of instruction of the population as a whole, apart from the major cities, has assumed catastrophic proportions, he said.

Mr. Rocher, taking part in the 12th congress of the Canadian Institute of Public Affairs, said Quebec remains an enclave in which human capital has been and still is under-developed.

Except for the elite, the situation for the great majority "is truly alarming." More than half of the active population of Quebec had had no more than elementary schooling.

"This puts Quebec at the bottom of the list of all Canadian provinces. To this sombre picture we must add that it is the French-Canadian who suffers most from this lack of instruction," he said.

"In effect, the English-speaking people of Quebec are among the most highly educated in the world."

According to the 1961 census, Mr. Rocher said, 43 per cent of Quebecers between 20 and 24 years of age had had no more than elementary schooling, compared with 30 per cent for all of Canada; 25 per cent for Ontario; and 16 per cent for British Columbia.

"These latter figures, more than any others, show up the alarming backwardness of Quebec in using its human resources, for this means that in 1965 Quebec cannot count on its population between 25 and 30 to provide a labor force with necessary qualifications."

In the world of today, the worker with less than elementary schooling was as badly off as the illiterate of the 19th century. But the problem was graver still.

"It isn't enough merely to prolong schooling. We must also give young people and adults the kind of instruction which responds to the needs of the society in which they must live and work.

"Now, we must acknowledge that we suffer from outmoded secondary teaching as well as from a lack of foresight and planning in the matter of human resources. Our secondary teaching is out of date because it does not prepare (the pupil) for work and does not lead to jobs."

HUGH MACLENNAN, NOTED CANADIAN AUTHOR, PAYS TRIBUTE TO THE LATE DR. RABINOVITCH

The following appeared in the Montreal Star:

"On September 16 Dr. Reuben Rabinovitch, neurologist of this city, died at the age of only fifty-seven at the height of his powers. Like most of his friends and patients, I had had no intimation that he had been aware for some time that he might cease like that at any moment. I still find it hard to believe that he has.

"In the obituaries the press noted that he had been born on a farm at La Macaza where his immigrant parents were pioneers; that he had had a distinguished career as a neurologist in Paris and Montreal; that he had played an heroic role in the French Resistance until the Nazis captured and imprisoned him; that his devoted wife went through many of his war-time experiences; that after the war he was decorated by the governments of both France and the United States.

"Dr. Rab was a very great, a very rare healer. Whether from his concentration camp experience or from native sensitivity, he had acquired what seemed to me to be a Shakespearean knowledge of men. Like many of his patients I often had the feeling that he was literally inside my own mind — not out of curiosity but merely because he was there. And being there, he took my fears away, and when he got out again, I found that some of his own courage had been left behind inside of me. He loved life. Few men more subtly and accurately understood its fragility; he was also indignant at it, as most of us are without daring to admit it.

"When my novel, 'The Watch That Ends The Night,' appeared, it was widely believed that its doctor-protagonist, Dr. Jerome Martell, was modelled on the famous Dr. Norman Bethune. He wasn't, for I never knew Bethune. But Martell's way of dealing with his patients was Dr. Rab's way. This is not to suggest that Martell was modelled off him; he wasn't. But if I had not known Dr. Rab, I could never have understood Dr. Martell.

"I went to Dr. Rab because I had been troubled for years by back trouble — nothing serious as the Neurological Institute considers a case to be serious — but bad enough to paralyze my movements pretty often. Dr. Rab taught me how to deal with that, but he also taught me much more. He helped me to deal with myself; he enabled me to become a better writer. In saying this, I know that hundreds of his patients would say the same of their own experience with this very rare doctor who, when we visited him, seemed rather to be visiting us; to know us better than we knew ourselves, and then with a mysterious luminous smile, a blend of irony and kindliness, to return again to himself."

Dr. Reuben Rabinovitch, 5797 Deom Avenue, Montreal, died on Thursday, September 16, at the Royal Victoria Hospital, at the age of fifty-seven years. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Denise Genatzy Rabinovitch, formerly of Paris, France; three sons: Dr. Alex Rabinovitch, interning at the Royal Victoria Hospital; Stephen Rabinovitch, of Miami, Florida, an airline pilot for Eastern Air Lines, and a Canadian Olympic swimmer; Albert, aged eighten years, a fourth year student at McGill University, Faculty of Science; and a daughter, Sylvie, aged fifteen years, a grade ten student at Outremont High School; a grandson, Daniel Maurice, aged one year, son of Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Rabinovitch; and his mother, Mrs. Bella Rabinovitch Rakita, 4980 Bourret Street. He was the son of the late Maurice Rabinovitch, of La Macaza, Quebec. Funeral services took place from Paperman's. Rabbi Charles Bender officiated, assisted by Dr. Solomon Frank, Rabbi. Burial was at Kehal Israel Memorial Park Cemetery, in Dollard des Ormeaux. Shiva was at the home. Dr. Rabinovitch was born in La Macaza, where his immigrant parents pioneered in the district. He was educated in Montreal schools; received the Bachelor of Arts degree from New York University, in New York, in 1934; the Medical degree at the University of Paris, in Paris, France, in 1940; and the Master of Science degree at McGill University in 1947. Dr. Rabinovitch was assistant neurologist at the Royal Victoria Hospital, and the Montreal Neurological Institute; senior neurologist in charge at the Jewish General Hospital; and assistant professor of neurology and neuro-psychiatry at McGill University. He was president of the Canadian Neurological Society, and of L'Association des Neurologistes et Neuropsychiatres de la Province de Quebec. He was also consultant des Laurentides at L'Annonciation, Quebec. He was the author of a text-book on "Diseases Of The Intervertebral Disc And Its Surrounding Tissues", which was published in 1961. He did notable research work in the fields of intervertebral discs and in muscle disorders. In 1947 he was awarded the United States Medal of Freedom, with Silver Palm, for saving the lives of Allied airmen in Nazi-occupied France. He was in the French capital when war broke out, and remained through the collapse of France, disregarding his own safety in his efforts to aid injured airmen, when they parachuted to earth over the German-held territory. He kept up this work even after he was interned by the Nazis, giving fellow prisoners of war the benefit of his medical experience. The Germans caught up with him after he had been collaborating with the French underground, and he spent fifteen months in a prisoner-of-war camp in Germany.

Braille Gets Lamport Gift Of Sound Studio

Dedication of the Sadie and Arthur Lamport Sound Recording Studio at the headquarters of the Jewish Braille Institute of America, in New York, has launched that organization on a broadly expanded program of service to blind persons who do not read braille, with the recording and production of high-fidelity tapes and long-playing records in Yiddish, Hebrew, and English.

"To the aged, Yiddish-speaking blind, the loss of sight is followed by a desperate psychological and cultural need for 'talking books' in Yiddish," declared Mrs. Harry J. Finke, president of the Jewish Braille Institute, at the dedication ceremonies. "These talking books are of tremendous help in overcoming the feeling of hopelessness and loneliness among the elderly Yiddish-speaking blind who are to be found in all parts of the United States and in other countries."

Through the facilities of its new sound studio, the Institute has recorded the first full-length, Yiddish, talking book, the great classic of Yiddish literature, "Tevye der Milcheger," by Sholem Aleichem, on long-playing records. This and other talking books of stories by several of the leading Yiddish writers are available to the Jewish blind from the Institute, free of charge. The presentation of the sound recording studio as a gift from the Lamport Foundation was made by Charles Friedman, a trustee of the Foundation, at dedication ceremonies.

Mesdames Irving E. Hollobow, president, of the National Federation of Temple Sisterhoods; Nathan H. Wadler, president, of Women's Branch of the Union of Orthodox Jewish Congregations of America; and Louis Ginzberg, chairman of the committee on services to the blind, of the National Women's League of the United Synagogue of America, representing Mrs. Albert Fried, president, who was then visiting Israel; all of religious organizations which contribute to the Institute, took part.

The Institute maintains a free circulating library of more than 15,000 braille volumes and an extensive collection of full-length, recorded, "talking books" at its headquarters, 48 East 74th Street, New York. It publishes the Jewish Braille Review, a monthly literary magazine, and also issues Hebrew-English braille prayer books and the Bible in Hebrew braille. Dr. Jacob Freid is the executive director.
